Embracing complexity to nurture social change

WHAT I CAN HELP YOU WITH

Designing and implementing learning-centred approaches to enhancing the capacity of social systems to address complex social challenges and their political economy dynamics.

Using data, evidence, models, stories and sensemaking to support the cycles of action and learning that are needed to address complex social challenges and strengthen the adaptive capacity of systems.

Nurturing the relationships and processes that make systems more than the sum of their parts, and which play a crucial role in supporting the collaborative and adaptive learning that is needed to address complex challenges, in ways that meet people's needs.

HOW I CAN HELP

I bring to the table deep knowledge of successful and unsuccessful approaches to addressing complex social and governance-related challenges, broad experience of programme implementation, a rich network of international connections and collaborators, and well-developed skills in strategy development, partnership building, research, program design, implementation, and learning.

PROFILE

I have thirty years of varied experience supporting efforts to understand and address complex governance-related challenges such as poverty, corruption, and the mis-use of public resources, including in countries in the global south.

Now as a freelance consultant, I work with people and organizations to support their efforts to work in systemic, relationship-focused and learning-centred ways, which strengthen the capacity of social systems to learn, adapt and address complex social challenges.

A common strand throughout my career has been sensitivity to the specificities of particular contexts and their political economy dynamics, and supporting frontline actors as they lead the way in facing the challenges that they face.
